

Conexant Systems - Chengdu, China Design and Project Management

Project management is a critical process that determines whether an undertaking becomes a value-added move or a costly expense for the company. Conexant Systems, a leader in semiconductor solutions for broadband communications, realized the importance of good project management when they tried to accommodate their growing business in a larger office space. Executives at Conexant first assigned their local team in Chengdu to complete the first phase of the project. The company's local management team relied on the landlord to provide most of the services for the project; however, the landlord had little to no experience in project and construction management. With no other professional help and the landlord as their contractor, the resulting build-out failed to meet corporate standards.

Before

After

Having successfully completed multiple projects for Conexant in other international locations, AsiaPac International was asked by corporate management for assistance in Chengdu. Our assignment was to fix the 5th floor problems created by the landlord and his team. Few weeks later we delivered an office space that met Conexant's corporate standards. The new office space accurately reflected Conexant's image and strategy. Corporate management at Conexant was very satisfied with the work done at Chengdu that they decided to assign us the second phase of the project. With project management as our core competency, we understand the importance of constant oversight and communication in ensuring that any project is properly done the first time, and our experienced team does everything possible to meet or exceed our clients' standards.
